Please complete the first two pages before the Webinar (Both Husband and Wife - takes about 10 minutes each)

Enter a score of 4,3,2,1 across each line for the personality descriptions given. Place a 4 for your first choice, 3 for your second, 2 for third and 1 for fourth. The choices should be the best description of you, not what you desire or hope to be. The first line is an example of how to score.

After completing this test, total each of the four vertical columns. To make sure you added correctly, add the four totals together. The sum should be 100. If it is not, you have miscalculated one or more of the four columns.

Now, for each of your four scores (D,I,S,C) plot them on the graph below. The column with the highest score will be your dominant personality type and the column with the next highest score will be your sub-dominant personality type. The closer you are in score for all the four types, the closer to an even temperament person you should be. Often, however, there is a significant difference in the four scores with your dominant and sub-dominant personality traits standing out from the other two. When this is the case then partnering, or teaming up, with someone who is strong in those two weakest traits is very desirable.

Knowing these	e things about yourself and your mate, how will you	to relate to them	?

- > Couple Sharing
 - 1. Each of you take the 5 Minute DISC test and chart your results. (if not done previously)
 - 2. Copy your mate's graph onto your sheet in a different color.
 - 3. Ask each other "What can I do to show you that I respect/understand your unique personality?"
